For a week or two past the theme of

It was pretty gen-erally understood that this extra ses-ison was for the purpose of inves-tigating the gambling transactions alluded to, and considerable interest was EASTER SERVICES. - Fourth Street Methodist Church.—Easter-day was joyfully observed at the Fourth Street Methodist alluded to, and considerable interest was accordingly manifested in the result of their deliberations. The indictments of the grand jury, which appear in our regular court proceedings, show that the fears of many that Lovell "would get his work in," to use a slang phrase, were well founded.

SOMETHING ABOUT LOVELL. But, although this Lovell affair has been pretty thoroughly discussed about town, there are many of our readers, doubtless, who are not conversant with the facta in the case. For their benefit we will briefly review the incidents which culminated in the action of the grand jury on Saturday.

jury on Saturday.

In March, 1877, a young man named A
W. Lovell came to this city and opened a
"99 cent store" on the north side of Mais street, between 11th and 12th streets street, between 11th and 11th attention of the store was run under the firm name of D. W. Lovell & Co., which firm, by the way, owns and control similar stores in several cities throughout the country, and makes its headquarters at Columbus, Obio. The "90 cent store" was a novelty. Ohio. The "90 cent store" was a novely in Wheeling, and young Lovelt did a profitable business, and was apparently on the high wave of prosperity. LOVELL WAS A STYLISH FELLOW,

The above is a literal copy of one of these notes, with names and amounts left blank. The amounts varied, but aggregated, as near as we can learn, something over $800. These letters had the effect of inducing two or three parties, who desired to escape the annoyance of a disagreeable publicity, to pay to Mr. Lovell or his attorney the amounts asked of them, although they claimed at the time that they had never won so much money from young Lovell. The larger number of persons so notified, however, paid no attention to the communication of Lovell, sen, and their names appear in our grand jury report this morning.

WHAT BROUGHT LOVELL, SR, HERE. Mr. D. W. Lovell, it seems, suspecting some crookedness in his son's manage-ment of the store entrusted to his charge, come here to investigate matters, and found the boy to be short something over $2,000 in his accounts. What ensued be-tween father and son is mere conjecture, but the elder Lovell immediately consulted an attorney and undertook to recover, in the manner indicated, the money which he had been led to believe had been lost by his son at the gaming table.

Now as to Lovell's losses in gaming, there is but one story among those with whom he played, viz: that he seldom lost. We have conversed with a number gentlemen who have frequently seen ovell at the gaming table, and they are nanimous in pronouncing him an adept. e is spoken of as a cool, clever player, odist Church.—Easter-day was joyfully observed at the Fourth Street Methodist Church yesterday. The altar, pulpit and screen in Iront of the singing gallery were beautifully decorated with flowers. The music eliciled general commendation. The opening piece on the organ by Miss Anna Logan, and the voluntary by the choir, were specially praised. Dr. George preached on "Jesus Demonstrated to be the Son of God by His Resurrection from the Dead." The Sunday School room was also tastily decorated. There were flowers, not only at the Superintendent's stand, but also on every teacher's desk. The wild flowers, which seemed so to enjoy the spray of the fountain, were greatly admired. Addresses were made by Dr. Logan, Col. Thurston and Dr. George. The school was largely attended. house had reason to suspect that the Madame was in the habit of stealing softly about at night in her stocking feet and playing the part of an eavesdropper. In order to put the matter to a practical test a cruel boarder, who perhaps nursed some secret spite against the lady of the house, purchased a box of small tacks and scattered them along the hall in front of his room door. That night, soon after the boarders had retired to their sleeping apartments, footsteps were heard in the hall, as usual, and shortly a slight female acream announced that the tacks were getting in their work. This was followed by a succession of screams, and a sound as of a heavy body falling upon the floor. As those of the boarders who occupied rooms in the immediate vicinity hal been let into the secret, all remained quietly in their apartments. The next morning at the breakfast table, however, the strange noises which had been beard during the night were the all-absorbing topic of conversatioa.
